Camp SP-25

Friends of
Upton State Forest,
Upton, Massachusetts
Responding to the Great Depression of the 1930s, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt created New Deal programs such as the CCC. Millions of unemployed young men enlisted in this peacetime army to do emergency conservation work that included forestry and construction of roads, trails, bridges and dams. They battled erosion, fought forest fires, controlled tree diseases and insect damage, and developed public parks, beaches and forests.

THE CCC IN UPTON

When the CCC enrollees arrived at Camp SP-25 in Upton on August 12, 1935, there was grave forest fire danger due to the acres of slash left from clear-cut logging. They made and burned brush piles leaving a few for wildlife cover and destroyed thousands of gypsy moth egg masses. Roosevelt’s “Tree Army” of SP-25 planted 230,000 trees and built six miles of truck trails.

In March 1936, flooding washed out the Wildwood Dam destroying part of Route 140. A dependable road was important to the local hat industry for transporting their goods to the railroad in Grafton. Men of the camp had the road passable within a day. That same year an enrollee rescued a young girl who had fallen through the ice on Mill Pond. In April 1937, CCC men assisted in finding a missing two year old child.

In the evenings and on weekends there was time for recreation and education. Classes ranged from traditional courses to vocational skills training. In January 1936, the leather craft from the Upton camp won first place at an exhibit in the Boston Public Library. In 1937 the camp team won a basketball championship as well as the Fourth District soccer championship in 1936. They placed second in the district that year for volleyball.

Although many Uptonians were apprehensive when the camp opened, by the time the last contingent left on November 9, 1938, the enrollees of SP-25 were an accepted and welcome part of the community.
